Virginius Dabney was an American teacher, journalist, writer, and editor. The editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch from 1936 to 1969 and author of several historical books, Dabney won the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing in 1948 due in part to his opposition to the poll tax. However, in his later years, he was criticized for insufficient criticism of Massive Resistance. Across Years Memories Virginian Dabney Virginius

Dabney writes charmingly of his sheltered upbringing as the son of a University of Virginia history professor; here is the best of his book. He remembers warmly his friends in the Richmond law offices and banks, but oddly neglects the colorful old hacks and bright young fellows who passed through the Richmond city rooms of his years.
